My name is Nicole Williams, and I'm a financial advisor with GuideStone®. I believe financial planning is about more than numbers — it's about walking alongside individuals and families through life's most joyful and challenging seasons with wisdom, compassion and a steadfast trust in the Lord.

My call to this work began early. During my senior year of high school, I became my mother's medical and financial power of attorney. That experience taught me firsthand the peace that comes from having a plan — and the hardship that comes when one isn't in place. It shaped my conviction that everyone deserves thoughtful guidance and the confidence to make well-informed financial decisions that reflect their faith and values.

I earned my Bachelor of Arts in human communication studies from Shippensburg University and my Juris Doctor from Temple University Beasley School of Law.* Before joining GuideStone, I worked in corporate compliance, financial planning, banking and finance law, and owned a small carpentry business — experiences that strengthened my appreciation for diligence, integrity and stewardship in every area of life.

Since entering the financial planning profession in 2017, I've specialized in serving millennials, Gen X professionals and ministers, developing personalized strategies that honor each client's unique calling and priorities.

Outside of work, I serve in my local church through the Mothers and Young Adults ministries. I enjoy cycling, kayaking, cooking and woodworking, and I'm a loyal Philadelphia sports fan. Life in Dallas is made all the more joyful by my South African Boerboel dog, Sonto.

At GuideStone, my goal is to provide a biblical perspective on money management and help clients honor the Lord with their finances, just as they honor him with their lives. It is a privilege to serve those who serve others. How can I serve you?

*Nicole R. Williams holds a Juris Doctor degree, which denotes completion of a graduate-level legal education. In her role as a financial planner, Nicole does not offer legal advice, act as an attorney, or engage in legal representation. For legal services, clients should seek a qualified attorney.
